

Free Chee Week 2 Power Rankings 2025

Sound Familiar?

Some things just don't change in this league huh? Matt drafts Tua, Joey takes a million Eagles and Ger's team sucks cock. It's tradition at this point. After an absolute pigfest of a week one, a lot has changed from the committee's preseason predictions. Let's get into it.

I'm writing this before MNF so I started with the worst teams and worked my way up.

(Update after MNF: That game stunk. Didn't change any of the committee's opinions. Except I was too harsh on JJ McCarthy. Apologies to Art of the Deal.)

Tier 1: The Favorites

1. Work Ass- Sweeney

Work Ass might have cracked the code. We can already hear North Willow St. punching the air making wild claims about "HoW iS hE aBoVe mE" after the results of their matchup this week. It's important to remember the committee analyzes numbers beyond the scoreboard. Bo "Jangles" Nix and Trevor "Saint" Lawrence combined for only 20 points and Work Ass still put up a respectable showing. The main reason we have Work Ass #1 is because we think he nailed all of his sleeper picks. Emeka "Okafor" Egbuka, Ricky Pearsall, and Bill Merritt all look like locks. He paid a combined $23 for those guys. JSN looks like he'll be a target hog for Sam Darnold in Seattle and Chase "Emmett" Brown is the bellcow in what should be one of the best offenses in the league.

Having said that, Nix and Lawrence will need to pick it up. Their performances on Sunday are not going to cut it. We don't know if these guys will be top ten QBs, but the expectation is they'll be top half. If they can live up to that, Work Ass is going to have a very nice season.

Best Pick: Ricky Pearsall. He got the WR1 in Kyle Shanahan's offense for $3. Let's give credit in the chat.

Worst pick: Bo Nix? None of Work Ass' picks are really bad but Nix for $46 might be a bit of an overpay.

2. Stewed C- Joey

Stewed might be back with another outstanding team. After dominating much of last season, Stewed flamed out early in the playoffs. Intel out of Jefferson suggests he walked around with a hatchet for a week after that. Good news is that frustration led to significant motivation and he spent the offseason optimizing his draft approach. Early signs are pointing to a big payoff for Stewed.

Since Jalen Hurts became the full-time starter in 2021, he's been no worse than 6th in points per game for QBs. Reliability is elite. Derrick "King" Henry just showed on Sunday night how good he still is. Trying to tackle him is like trying to prevent Jefferson from touching bag in Boston. Furthermore, Stewed got good value on Stafford, Devonta Smith and Garrett Wilson. We don't have much faith in his depth but Stewed has some nice starters and two dominant guys in Hurts and Henry.

Best Pick: Derrick Henry. Future HOF for $45. Compare that to Nabers for 45s.

Worst Pick: David Montgomery. Montgomery might be fine, but Detroit looked atrocious and we have concerns about how much of a step back that team might take without both of their coordinators and two interior linemen from 2024.

3. The Jackson Brownes- Boyle

He doesn't deserve it. Mickey Mouse POS bid up Josh Allen and then complained when he actually got him. I'm ruined. Having said that, the committee remains impartial. Josh Allen has finished top 2 in total QB points for five straight seasons and he was QB1 in three of those seasons. He's the greatest player alive. When you pair that with Bijan Robinson "Cano", Bucky Irving and an ascending Michael Penix this team might really be something. We think he hit on some low-cost receivers in Keenan Allen and Khalil Shakir plus we like his dart throws with Elic Ayomanor and Isaac TeSlaa. Ayomanor put Travis Hunter in a blender on a Friday night two years ago. If you despise Hunter, great watch. The success of this team likely hinges on how good Penix can be. If Penix is a legitimate top 10-12 QB, this team is going places.

Best Pick: Josh Allen.

Worst Pick: Nobody he spent money on but let's torch him for Elijah Mitchell. Guy is essentially riding pine on the Chiefs practice squad.

4. Team Obama Sopranos- TK

This team should maybe be higher, but the committee was thrown off by this name. As it is, they have immense upside. Obama decided to go all in on elite QB play and spend $125 on Lamar Jackson and Joe Burrow. Burrow played like shit; Xavier Worthy was knocked out immediately and Obama still put up the 2nd most points in the league this week. Type of shit that makes you very nervous when you consider the historical drone strike capabilities of Obama's team. Jakobi Meyers, Zay "Ereck" Flowers, and Tyler "Elizabeth" Warren look like value picks as well for Obama. A very risky strategy is showing strong initial results and we like what we see. If he can avoid any questionable trades, we fully expect Obama to be a force in the playoffs.

Best Pick: Zay Flowers. $8 for Lamar's #1 receiver feels pretty damn good.

Worst pick: Jalen Milroe. Have to assume that one is on autopick.

Tier 2: Muddled Middle

To be honest, the committee had no idea how to rank most of these teams. Too early to tell on a lot of them. And the model hasn't calibrated for week two yet so we're really just throwing darts.

5. Ginny Sack- Chris

Some, not me but some, were cooking Ginny Sack's draft strategy while he wasn't there to defend himself. It's a little soon to declare victory, but Ginny might have found an alternate investment strategy that could lead to league domination. While others blew cash on QBs, Ginny guzzled beers and waited patiently, capitalizing on potentially depressed valuations for Christian McCaffrey, Drake London and Brock Bowers. There is certainly some risk in this as he's rostering one real human being at quarterback. That human is Kyler Murray and he looked sharp on Sunday, but Tyler Shough as QB2 is the type of stuff Rutgers would roll out. Ginny is betting that a well-rounded roster can compensate for a bad superflex. This generally goes against the committee's philosophy, but after one week we're starting to buy what this team is selling.

Best Pick: Kyler Murray. Kyler for $32 is a steal after prices on some other guys.

Worst Pick: Tyrone Tracy. I don't know if this is that bad but holy shit did the Giants look like Bathroom Guy's rec league team. Selling stock in the whole team.

6. Cookie Monster Golf Cart- TJ

Speaking of darts, the son of Jack, Jaxson Dart figures heavily into the upside of CMGC. His lineup has few weaknesses and the Flacco/Dart combo for QB2 figures to be functional at a minimum. Baker has turned into a TD machine, Ladd is the best Caucasian receiver in the league, and the Jeanty-Achane duo could be electric. CMGC even bet on the Kyle Pitts resurgence. Credit to him. As with everyone, injuries are a concern, especially to a concussion magnet like Chris Olave. Still, this team is probably -180 to make the playoffs right now. There were some seriously cheap players here too.

Best pick: Kyle Pitts. The committee is fully onboard. For $2, Pitts might just be a top-5 tight end this year.

Worst pick: Joe Mixon. Mixon might just be a non-human at this point. Still only $2 though.

7. Gorlock the Destroyer Schwartz- Papi

For the 2nd straight year, Gorlock's team rests almost entirely on the fate of four dudes. But those 5 dudes might be nasty. CeeDee Lamb looked like a potential WR1 overall candidate in dicing up the eagles last Thursday. If he didn't have a case of the drops, we'd likely have been looking at 14 catches for 230 yards. Amon-Ra had an ugly first game, but he's been highly reliable in his career so far and gets the benefit of the doubt from the committee. Jordan Love is the quarterback for what we expect to be the best team and one of the highest scoring offenses in the NFC. Couple him with maybe the sleeper of the draft Justin "Landry" Fields and Gorlock really has something cooking. Not entirely sure what he was thinking with some of the sleeper picks, but we're trying to be positive here.

Best pick: Justin Fields. If Fields performs anything like he did in week one, he is going to be the theft of the year for $29. (honorable mention: Hunter Henry)

Worst Pick: Pacheco looked retarded on Friday. $17. Yikes.

8. The Art of the Deal- Matt

Deal's draft appears to be a bit of a mixed bag after week one. Let's start with the bad. Tua looked like Zaukas blindfolded. If that continues, he's cooked. JJ "Joseph" McCarthy shook off an awful start to finish strong. Investing heavily in 3 QBs and having two be poor would not be great for Deal. However, the committee is of the mind that Tua has enough track record to call week one a fluke. The combination of Tua and Justin Herbert could be scary. And with McCarthy in the mix, Deal might have better QB options than anyone. Breece "Carnegie" Hall looked outstanding in the new look Jets offense. If he becomes the RB1 many expected last year, Stewed C is going to be quaking in his boots. Additionally, the committee would be remiss if we didn't mention that Deal might have stolen two starters in Javonte Williams and Deebo Samuel for $4 each. Deal hopes to avoid the slow start that plagued him last year before he went on a run in the second half of the season.

Best pick: Breece Hall. $19 for a back that good is like getting a triple mashed burger and onion rings for free.

Worst pick: George Pickens. He might be too stupid for his own good.

9. Team Daniel- Paul

If Daniel Jones is going to look like an MVP candidate, this is way too low. We don't buy that yet though. Our projections assume he's going to be a top 20 QB going forward though and that's pretty damn good for the measly price of $21. Daniel was far more strategic with his spend this year than in years past. Many still bring up the "can we get more money incident" of 2022. It's clear this front office has evolved its approach since then. He bet big on three young studs in Jahmyr "Mister" Gibbs, BTJ, and Jayden Daniels and then filled out the roster with some CHEAP flyers. Credit to Daniel for executing his approach to perfection. Daniels is awesome. We don't know if he's quite on the Lamar and Josh level every week, but he's clearly right behind them with Hurts. After the big week one win, the front office saw fit to make 49 lbs. of pulled pork for the team. Reports from Hudson Street revealed that Shedeur Sanders said he doesn't eat pork. Interesting strategy by him.

Best pick: Hollywood Brown. $1 for what may be the Chiefs WR1 for half the season. Stealing.

Worst pick: Jaydon Blue. Now this guy was a popular sleeper so it's hard to shit on him, but Blue was a healthy scratch week one. Not promising.

10. Life with Derrick- Justin

This team could be good if the quarterbacks get better. The committee is doubtful that will happen after those debuts. Bryce looked like Aldana trying to play quarterback. Just an absolute midget behind an offensive line that might as well be five Evan Neals. Stroud didn't look a whole lot better. Some have argued he's more interested in podcasting with Tucker Carlson than throwing touchdowns. Not great. However, if those two clowns get it figured out the rest of this team has dudes. Omarion Hampton and Alvin Kamara look great. The depth Derrick has at receiver might be unmatched in the whole league. And Hockenson has Gallo's hair. We'll be watching this team closely over the next few weeks to see if the QB play can get to where it needs to be.

Best pick: Marvin Harrison Jr. For $17, this might be one of the best buy lows in recent memory.

Worst pick: Stroud or Young? None of the picks are bad value, but if both QBs suck they have to get cooked.

11. Pigs on the 7th Rank- Deez

There he is. The committee kind of likes this team. A lot of it comes down to how bad the Dolphins are because Pigs decided to grab both Tyreek and Waddle. If the Dolphins stink, oh dear. For the second straight year, Pigs snagged Homo Dubz as his QB. When asked why, he said “I like his nails.” That’s the type of stuff that’s not uncommon to hear out of Bloomfield. The biggest positive for this team is Patrick Mahomes looked awesome in week one. He was throwing to absolute schmucks and washed-up celebrities for the most part and still found a way to ball. If that’s the Mahomes we see all year, he’s going to be a lot better than last season. Otherwise, this team is a lot of meh for now. These guys might be good or they might stink. That’s the type of analysis you tune in to read, right?

Best pick: Jatavion Sanders. Just absolute king of a player.

Worst pick: Darnell Mooney. Several draft rooms were stunned seeing the price tag on this fella. One competing owner said, “You couldn’t pay me to have that criminal on my team.”

12. Sweeney Deez and Zaukas- Mitch

The committee doesn’t know what to do with this outfit. Our future king Drake Maye looked far too pedestrian for SDZ’s liking while Dak looked awesome but put up no points. Tough combo to start the year. He essentially bet big on Dak, Maye and Chase being top performers and the committee doesn’t really buy it. Last year SDZ rode the heroics of Josh Allen, Bijan and Goff with some elite role players to the title. That does not look like it will be happening this year.

On the bright side, Zach Charbonnet and Dobbins might be real players. There’s upside here but we’re not really believers. Serious regret not outbidding North Willow St. for the Greek God of Football. At least SDZ would look the best of anybody in the league with a bleached tuck.

Best pick: Charbonnet probably. For $7, he might be a truck.

Worst pick: Jamarr Chase. Nothing worse than when the Bengals play like scrambled dogfood.

Tier 4: Retard Hour

13. Here Without You Tishman- Gallo

We didn’t want to do it to him. But this quarterback situation is an atrocity. It brings back memories of year one when several in the league didn’t realize how important QB was for superflex. Sam Darnold, Anthony Richardson, and Kirk Cousins are the only QBs rostered. So one bad, one retarded, and one washed. Is that generally good?

Having said that, we will give Tishman some credit. The rest of his picks are solid. AJ Brown might slit Hurts throat if he only gets one target again, Davante Adams seems to fit in nicely with the Rams, and the Taylor-Cook duo at RB would start on my team. Tishman even has some nice depth at running back with Jaylen Warren and Dylan Sampson looking productive.

Best pick: Cook? Idk it's a bit early to say. We'll probably have to revisit this in October.

Worst pick: Anthony Richardson. Just look at the guy.

14. Sweeney.- Connor

Might've had a few too many Millers during draft, huh? Committee doesn't want to bury him to bad. Geno and Puka looked solid. Trey McBride is a horse with wings. But most of his other high-priced players carry significant risk. Tee Higgins is a known injury risk. Nico Collins missed a huge piece of time last year and his QB situation is becoming iffier by the week. And as good as Puka is, the committee has injury concerns with him too. Assuming health, we like the core of this team.

The real issue with Sweeney. is the running back position. These backs flat out stink. Rhamondre and Bhayshal Tuten are his starting running backs? Just stop it. They combined for 4.8 points. And the only other running back he has on the roster is Quinshon Judkins. The guy isn't even signed by his team. Will probably find the inside of a prison cell before the end zone. It's very likely this team will be working the phones for trades in the coming weeks.

Best Pick: Puka could be the WR1 overall and he went for $37. Clean.

Worst Pick: Rhamondre. Do you think it was fun drafting the Patriots backup as your RB1?

15. Senior Al Coke Twins- Oscar

Let's start with the good news. Saquon "Charles" Barkley remains one of the best football players alive and Aaron Rodgers looks like he does in fact still have a pulse (credit to him). Beyond that, committee is a little skeptical. Mike Evans had a slow day, but he'll be fine. The trouble starts with Kenneth Walker. He was essentially in a split backfield with Zach "Carbonara" Charbonnet and you can't pay $28 for a guy who's going to split carries all year. Committee is very concerned about Walker going forward. Beyond that, Al Coke has a whole lot of $1 mongoloids. Rachaad White? Carries Bucky's jockstrap. Rashod Bateman? Deep ball specialist. Adam Thielen? Washed. Jayden Higgins? Bloomfield probably thinks I made that name up. Al Coke is going to either have to work the waiver wire or have his top 5 guys dominate. The committee doesn't see the upside here. I would happily place a bet on Al Coke +700 for bleached tuck.

Best Pick: Saquon. He was $59 but he's very good at football. And the other options aren't great.

Worst pick: Might be Walker but we're calling out Mason Rudolph here.

16. Ger- still uses emoji stuff for team name. Nobody gets.

Was he kidding with that draft? The man spent real US dollars on Russell Wilson and Pittsburgh's backup running back. Nabers might be the best receiver in the world, and it won't matter as long as Mr. Unlimited is under center. One anonymous league member went as far as to say "this team might be worse than when he spent $125 on Tyreek Hill. What a freak."

That was a bit harsh but the point stands here. Ger's best player is quite clearly Malik Nabers and without a significant improvement at the QB position, it's hard to see Nabers living up to his $45 cost. Additionally, the strategy of going with bad QBs again is not something the committee looks favorably upon. But that seems to be the MO for this team. He did sneak into the playoffs last year so perhaps he'll prove us all wrong again. Until then, he'll occupy the bottom spot of these rankings.

Best Pick: It's early but Ger might've stolen value on two players. Travis Etienne looks like the bellcow of Liam Coen's new offense for only $8. Considering what Bucky Irving "Fryar" did last year in Coen's offense, Etienne has serious upside. Additionally, Keon "Derrick" Coleman put on a clinic last night. If Ger got Josh Allen's WR1 for $4 he's going to feel pretty good about that.

Worst Pick: Let's be reasonable. Mr. Unlimited.
