

Free Chee Week 11 Power Rankings

The committee would like to apologize for last week's lack of rankings. Most committee members were in Mar-A-Lago for a bit of a soiree. No further weeks will be missed. As teams are eliminated from contention, it's likely the committee will begin adjusting the format of the rankings going forward. Trust. Without further ado.

1. Life with Derrick- Justin

I mean he has to be kidding. After one off week, Derrick returns to his steamrolling ways by obliterating the Cap Stoppers. Ja'Marr Chase might not be able to read One fish, two fish, red fish, blue fish but he can certainly rack up some yards. This one was over by midnight Thursday after Chase dropped 52.9 points against the Ravens. Oddly enough, this was the most points anybody had scored in a fantasy game since Ja'Marr Chase shaved my head on January 2nd, 2022. The rest of Derrick's team was just above average this week.

Nervous About: Trevor Lawrence. With Justin Fields relegated to the bench and Lawrence hurt, Derrick is down to just Bo "Jackson" Nix at quarterback. While Nix has severely outpaced our expectations, we aren't sure Derrick can win the league with just him at quarterback. Need Lawrence to get healthy and back into his peak form as PMWLH.

2. Pigs on the 7th Rank- Deez

Of the famous Sweeney-Zaukas-Deez triumvirate, Deez is by far the strongest. He put up a strong defensive performance to silence the Tishman this week and move to 8-2, all but clinching a playoff spot. Deez had such disdain for Tishman's team he didn't even bother starting a second receiver opting instead to leave an injured Amari Cooper in his WR2 slot. Some might even say the move shows Bloomfield is emanating a bit of cockiness as he rides a six-game win streak. The most mind-boggling part of this is that Homo Williams and his cum guzzling pals have been atrocious. This team is being led by the Mixon-Conner-Cement Boots trio.

Nervous About: I mean it has to be the Homo. He hasn't been in double digits in a month. A month. And that was against the Jaguars defense who might not be able to stop Riverdell's offense.

3. Gorlock the Destroyer Schwartz- Papi

Gorlock took care of business with a workmanlike showing against the Gotham Rogues. Gorlock essentially has 5 real players and two of them were on bye in Geno "Atkins" Smith and Kenneth "Tishman" Walker. But it didn't matter because Joe "Biden" Burrow went nuclear and Jim Cook did enough. Gorlock is firmly in the playoff mix and the outcome to his season will likely come down to is he hot at the right time. Type of analysis you pay me for right? At 7-3 he's over 98% to make the playoffs. One could argue he's been feasting on a cupcake schedule as his last 4 games have come against all pig-off participants. Food for thought.

Nervous about: Sam Darnold. With Darnold reverting to his Jets form, Justin Jefferson and Jordan Addison's outlook has to be downgraded. They combined for just 11.2 points against a Jaguars defense that has been hot garbage.

4. Stewed C- Joey

Stewed has cooled off a bit but this is still the first week all season he'll finish below 100 points. That sort of consistency is exactly what the committee looks for. Algorithm continues to have him with the 4th best odds to win the title (more on that later). Stewed may use bizarre motivational tactics on his team and post suspect memes in the locker rooms, but he gets these guys to produce. You won't find a more reliable RB duo than Alvin Kamara and Saquon Barkley and it's clear Drake Maye is holding back in preparation for the playoffs. Our reporter Damian Watkins reached Maye after the game for comment, and he said, "Yeah I saw Caleb across the way and thought alright boys let's pack it up they don't have a chance." Wise beyond his years.

Nervous about: Jayden Daniels. Daniels has been great but after his hot start he's fallen to QB7 in points per game. Will this downward trend continue?

5. Deserves to be Shot- Mitch

This team isn't spectacular but they're solid. He's now won 3 of 4 and 5 of 7 to put himself in position to clinch a playoff berth. Shot has scored between 112 and 135 points in 6 straight weeks. It was a close call between Cap Stoppers and Shot but we ended up with the slight lean toward Shot. Accusations of bias will surely follow but that's nothing the committee hasn't dealt with before. Newark Street has been pelted with eggs, tomatoes, and even Lorenzo's chicken wings at one time or another. The committee will carry on. The Minnesota defense might be the secret weapon for this with double digit points in 7 out of 9 games this year.

Nervous about: Jatavion Sanders. We wonder if it's almost unfair for Shot to have picked this guy up. On top of having an all-time great name, Sanders is 6'4" 252 lbs and runs like a silverback gorilla. We project him as TE4 overall for the remainder of the season.

6. Cap Stoppers- TJ

The Stoppers ran into Life with Derrick this week, so we don't hold the loss against him. Might as well be playing the '72 Dolphins. The main reason for the downgrade here is the QB play seems to be deteriorating. Baker's points declined for the 4th straight week as he struggles to adjust without Mike Evans and Chris Godwin in the lineup while Aaron Rodgers continues to increase his weekly dosage of DMT to potentially lethal levels. Having said that, the De'Von Achane and Jahmyr Gibbs duo have get away from the cops speed. Those two are obscene and could carry the Cap Stoppers' fairly far with minimal support from Rodgers and the rest.

Nervous About: DK Metcalf. He's missed two weeks with a knee injury and while John Metchie and others have filled in admirably, Stoppers needs Metcalf for the stretch run.

7. Sansa Ludacris- Chris

Ludacris got hit hard by the injury bug but seems to be recovering just in time for the stretch run. After a 4-1 start, Sansa had lost 4 straight coming into this week before beating Stewed C over the head with a shovel to potentially save his season. Kyler "Dejounte" Murray is making a push for MVP while Derek Carr is salvaging Sansa's superflex spot. He's got a manageable schedule the rest of the way with Cap Stoppers, Work Ass, HWYT and Ger. If he can go 2-2 or better he's likely in the playoffs. We've got him at a 65% chance to make playoffs.

Nervous About: Injuries. What will the status of Brian Robinson Jr, Tee Higgins and Dalton Kincaid be?

8. Sweeney.- Connor

At 5-5 Sweeney. needs a strong finish to make the playoffs but the return of Nico Collins awaits. With Collins in the lineup Sweeney. was 4-1, without him he has gone 1-4. It's been rumored Collins was "in the lab" this "week" to ensure he'll be "ready" for a return next week against Dallas. Trey McBride is a human truck, essentially ending Sauce Gardner's career on Sunday. Gardner was later seen complaining on twitter like a retarded pussy. I couldn't imagine it. Lastly, for how bad he is at real football Daniel Jones remains a surprisingly effective fantasy player. Sweeney. is likely competing with Hand me the Piss, Sansa and WHERESTUA for the last two playoff spots.

Nervous About: Newark Street.

9. Hand me the Piss- TK

This once proud team's outlook appears dismal at this point. Dak Prescott is out for the year after breaking his knee trying to stop a 450-lb woman from bumrushing the counter at Popeyes in Downtown Dallas last weekend. We award him some credit for being a good Samaritan and Dallas' season was probably cooked anyway. At 6-4, Piss probably only needs one more win to secure a playoff spot. Not sure Cooper Rush is going to be in Bloomfield's plans going forward though. He had -2 points against Philly. Additionally,

Jordan Mason usefulness has run its course as Christian McCaffrey has returned to the field.

Nervous About: Another squirrel in the fridge.

10. WHERESTUA- Matt

This team is back from the dead. When Tua was concussed, Watson was playing like Monopoli, and Russ was riding pine it looked like this was among the worst teams in the league. But due to some coach of the year level tactical decisions, Tua weathered the storm and now sits at .500 with a realistic chance at the playoffs. He most likely needs to go 3-1 the rest of the way because he's not gonna win any points for tiebreakers, but what a comeback from a month ago. We have Tua making the playoffs in 18% of simulations.

Nervous About: Russ. Can he keep this up? The committee thought Russ was beyond washed in the offseason and now he's come in and sparked the Pittsburgh offense. Something to monitor going forward.

11. Senior Al Coke Twins- Mikey

At 3-7, he's not gonna make the playoffs but this team is going to wreck some seasons down the stretch. Christian McCaffrey returned to the field this week to thunderous applause. Some reporters even compared it to the ovation I receive at Black Bear. The return of McCaffrey paired with the excellent play of Purdy and Jauan "Greg" Jennings powered Al Coke to a blowout of Work Ass. Kelce remains a colossal faggot and Nabers has fallen off after his hot start, but with the improvements this team has made have Al Coke down to a 7% chance of coming in last place.

Nervous About: Hosting the holiday party at Stewed Cow.

12. Marvin's Receiver Room- Paul

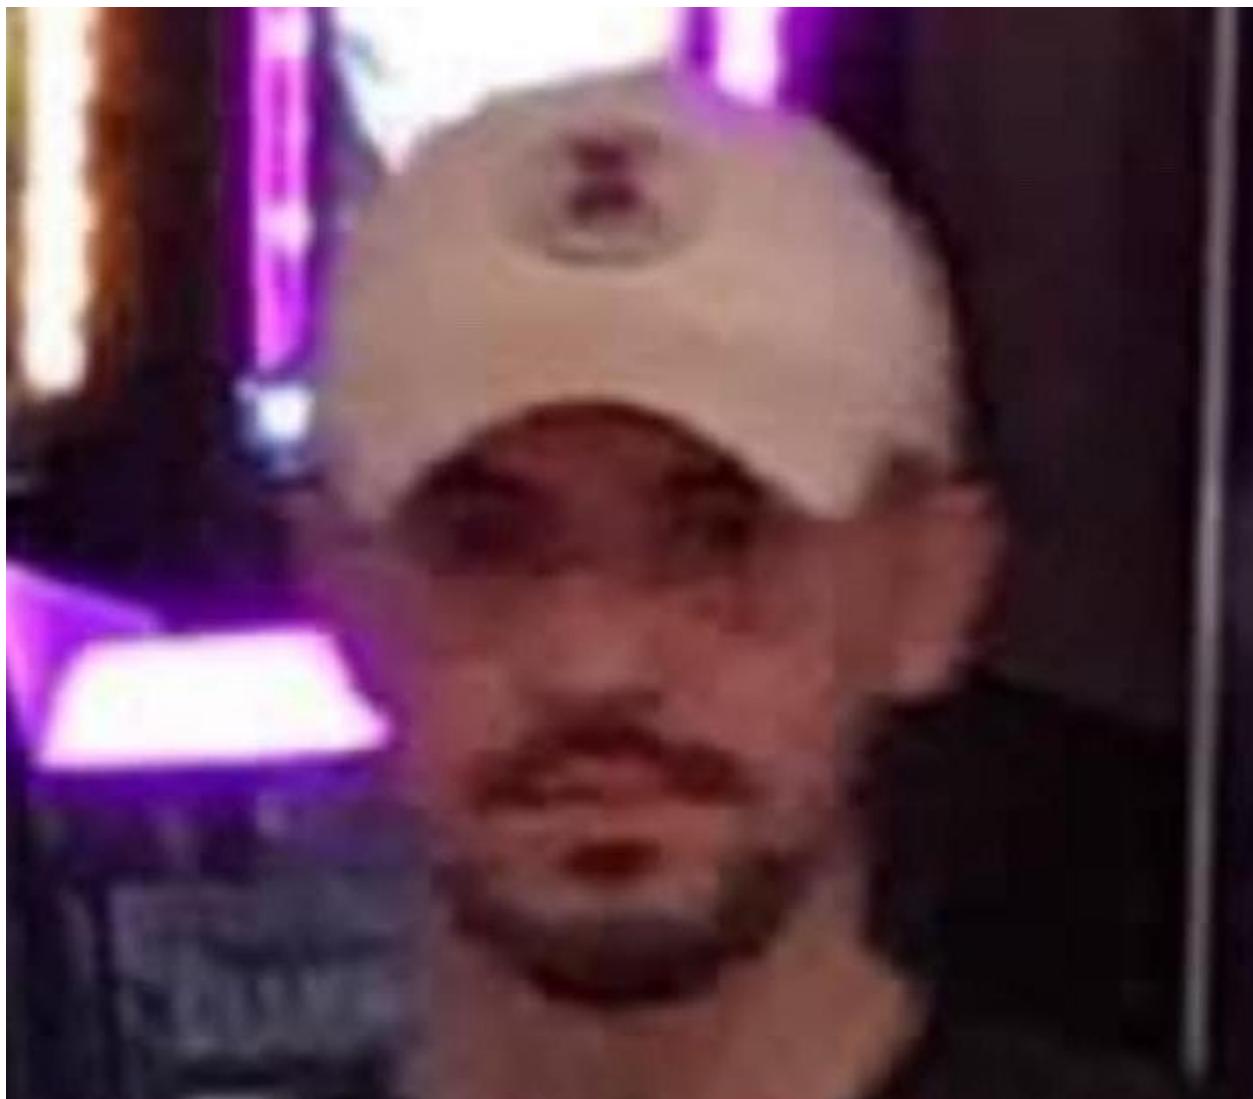

It's somewhat impressive how a team with the best player in fantasy by far could be 2-7-1. He has a 0.23% chance at the playoffs based on our current models after the loss to WHERESTUA. Even with a 32-point outing from Lamar, Marvin couldn't pull out the W. The outlook looks grim the rest of the way as he's a projected underdog in his next 3 games. Whispers from Hudson Street suggest Marvin is martialing resources for a December stand in the consolation bracket.

Nervous About: Not much. He's accepted his fate in the consolation bracket and has proven beyond doubt his ability to annihilate food is unmatched by most mortal men. If worst comes to worst, he'll consume his weekly cheese ball bucket in one sitting.

13. Ger- Ger

Ger has climbed back into borderline respectable territory with a 4-6 record. Unless he runs the table, his playoff chances are microscopic, but he's gotta be feeling a lot better about his chances of avoiding last place. With Cooper Kupp and Will Levis back in the lineup this is just about an average team. From what we've heard Ger is sort of checked out on managing this team because he's in such shambles watching the Giants every week. Poor Chap. Please see below for Ger's live reaction to the Giants drafting Daniel Jones on April 25th, 2019.

Nervous About: Are the Giants drafting Carson Beck?

14. Here Without You Tishman- Gallo

This is where it gets ugly. Tishman put up a weekly low of 77.44 points in getting dominated by Pigs on the 7th. He resorted to starting Mac Jones at QB with Love and Winston on bye. There's little hope here. HWYT will be in the consolation bracket and our models give him an 18% chance of finishing last. The good news is Bucky Irving continues to dazzle when given the opportunity. It's likely Irving will be going for $25-40 in the draft come next August.

Nervous About: Sweeney.

15. Gotham Rogues- Joe

Worst running backs in the league. Javonte Williams and Samaje Perine is the type of duo you start when you're actively tanking. I'd like to say it's because he has guys on bye but no he just has Jaylen "Orville" Wright and Jaleel "Sarah" McLaughlin on the bench. The Rogues' got 32 combined points from the kicker and defense and still only scored 95. This is the type of stuff the 0-17 Cleveland Browns would do. Imagine paying over $90 for CJ Stroud and Kirk Cousins for them to combine for 23 points.

Nervous About: Loser shaves head side bet. At the beginning of the season, a treaty between Newark and Willow Streets was brokered that ensured the team with the worse record at the end of the season would shave their head clean (with a straight razor).

16. Work Ass- Sweeney

He might be better than Gotham but at 2-8 this is cooked. The committee did take note of a VERY intriguing trade he executed this week though. Work Ass shipped out the Colts QB platoon of Joe Flacco and Anthony Richardson alongside Jake Ferguson to Marvin's Receiver Room in return for Sam LaPorta, Xavier Worthy and Aaron Jones. Work Ass was in serious need of running back help, so we get the idea but it's likely too little too late. There have been only 3 trades all season in the league and with the deadline fast approaching the committee has set the over under on trades remaining at 1.5.

Nervous About: Trey "Cedric" Benson. Benson has been coming on strong the past couple of weeks and if there's any upside for this team in the final month of the year it probably rests on Benson's shoulders.