

Week 3 2026 Free Chee Rankings

1. Boone (TJ)

Boone retains his perch for the third straight edition of the rankings. It was a true team effort as nobody scored more than 18 points but he had seven guys in double figures. As one committee member put it, it was almost like when you have a 2K team of all 82s like the 2013 Nuggets. Boone's pure roster talent is far greater than those Nuggets though. Baker is playing like the fry cook at Grubbs and yet Boone probably still has one of the better QB pairings to go with King Henry and a vaunted trio at receiver. Christian Watson and Parker Washington especially look poised to significantly outperform their auction value after two weeks. The bench is definitely shallower than we expected in the preseason, but given the wealth elsewhere it's a minor concern for now.

Stock Up: Kaimi Fairbairn. Some might think the committee only brings up Kaimi so we could launch a chorus of "KAIMI" shouts in the committee room. And while that's an obvious side benefit, there's a serious case that he's an undervalued asset for Boone. If Stroud and the Texans offense continue to sputter, Kaimi's bionic leg will prove to be essential for booming kicks.

Stock Down: Marvin "William Henry" Harrison. Much like William Henry Harrison holds the record for shortest tenure of any American president, MHJ will soon hold the record for biggest generational bust in the history of receivers. Everyone from Mel Kiper to Emmanuel Macron to Boyle was treating this guy like the second coming of his father, when in reality he's much closer to Ramses Barden.

2. Hello Darkness My Old Friend (Paul)

Darkness really took the offseason committee chirps to heart, and he has come out firing this year. Darkness takes down Shough in one of the bigger shootouts of week 2. Many will point to 39 points from his kicker and defense being unsustainable, but the committee doesn't care. He is showing the grit and coaching acumen that he lacked in prior years to pull out games like this. Not to mention, the duo of Jonathan Taylor and Kenneth Walker III looks absolutely ridiculous through two weeks. Trey McBride is easily the best tight end in the league right now and Joe Burrow will continue to pick it up as the season moves into October. Darkness was so dialed this week he even flew back to oversee his demolition of Shough in person. That sort of management is why he's quickly skyrocketed up these rankings.

Stock Up: Kenneth Walker III. While he was expected to be good, he looks like the potential RB1 through two weeks. Every time he touches the ball, he's a threat to take it the distance.

Stock Down: Aaron Rodgers. Holy washed. Five fantasy points from the completely immobile and potentially senile Rodgers. The committee isn't particularly high on the Patriots defense, and they just made Rodgers look like a headless chicken.

3. Pigs on the 7th Rank (Deez)

This was very tough this week. The top two definitely are in a tier of their own after one week and we didn't want to overreact after one bad week for Pigs. So he retains his top-three spot. Patrick Mahomes looks like he's fully back after dropping a vintage 30-point performance. Trevor only had 7-points but we crunched the all-22 and he still played well. We have no doubt he'll bounce back and keep Pigs among the best teams in the league. Bowers is expected back for week three which will give Pigs another weapon in this lineup. He can upgrade from the Juwan Johnson-Mark Andrews duo. And perhaps the biggest reason we're optimistic is Denzel Boston. Boston is maybe the best rookie skill player in the whole league, finding a way to put up some numbers with Deshaun Watson throwing him the ball.

Stock Up: Denzel Boston. His long touchdown against the Buccaneers was the type of play that makes us take notice.

Stock Down: Brian Thomas Jr. We were optimistic about a bounce back after last year's sophomore slump, but this start does not look promising. He continues to look like the T-Rex from Toy Story when Trevor throws the ball his way.

4. Nick Wright Barely Legal (TK)

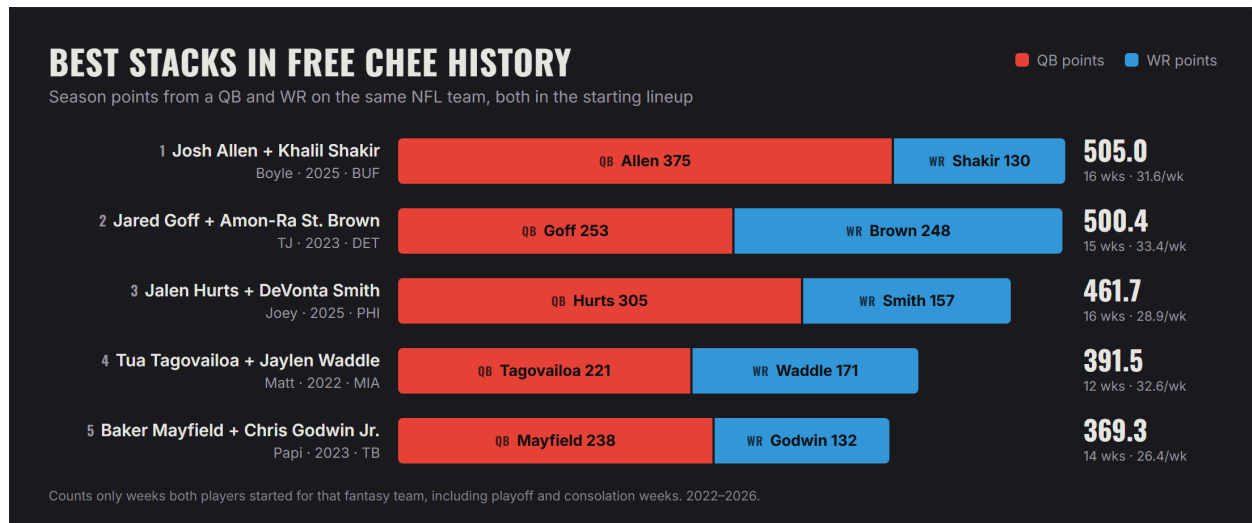

Ranking a team with one real QB this highly goes against much of the committee's worldview economically, politically, socially and spiritually. But Josh Allen might be so damn good he's worth two QBs. He followed up his 35-point outburst against the Texans in week one by teabagging the Lions on national TV to the tune of 41 points. He's been so good that Allen/Tua is the 5th highest scoring QB duo in the league through two weeks. And Tua has not seen the field. Elsewhere, Chuba Hubbard looks like he'll remain the RB1 in Carolina despite an offseason of Jonathan "Herb" Brooks gas. Aaron Jones Sr. will helm the Vikings backfield while Jordan "George" Mason completes his stint on IR. And CeeDee "Doron" Lamb plus Justin "Al" Jefferson is a duo that keeps Shough and F#ck awake at night. Davante won't put up monster performances like Monday night once Puka returns, but it's nice to know he still has it in him.

Stock Up: Jack Strand. Debut wasn't pretty, but he saw some playing time as the Falcons realized Cooper "Brandon" Rush is better suited to mow lawns than play quarterback. Feel free to watch his college highlights here.

Stock Down: Tua Tagovailoa. He's supposedly "getting better", but we don't buy it. He's scrambled.

5. Healthy as a Fucking Rhino (Connor)

Rhino dropped 153 points, narrowly behind Nick Wright for the top point total in week 2. Haters might argue there was some smoke and mirrors involved but not us. Sensing the way targets would shift with Nico Collins out of the lineup, Rhino expertly slotted Dalton "Howard" Schultz into his lineup just in time for CJ Stroud to pepper him with targets. Additionally, Cam Ward played one of his better games as a pro, running for two touchdowns and taking the Eagles to the wire. Admittedly, the committee isn't optimistic about this continuing, but we'll see how it goes. Now for our favorite part: the Jared Goff Amon-Ra St. Brown stack is one of the best stacks we've ever seen. After combining for 60+ the other night, it got us thinking about the best stacks in league history. See below.

Since Josh Allen basically created the Allen-Shakir stack all on his own, the Goff-Amon-Ra stack of 2023 is probably the best real stack in league history. Credit Rhino for replicating TJs strategy this year.

Decent detour, right? The point is we expect Goff-St. Brown to be up there with any of those and power Rhino to the playoffs.

Stock Up: Cam Ward. He may not have made us believers yet, but the stock is easily up after that performance. If he can keep it up, he'll be a viable QB2.

Stock Down: The committee's preseason assessment. We had Rhino 12th. While some impugn the integrity of the committee, we will continue to show humility in admitting where we were wrong. Credit to us.

6. Shough and F#ck (Boyle)

We can practically feel the steam coming out of his ears as he paces around his office reading this. “But but I scored a bunch of points! Paul only beat me because of the Panthers defense!”. You mean you lost because your opponent outwitted you with a stealth maneuver while you weren’t looking? Tough thing to concede.

Still, Shough has to feel pretty good after two weeks. Shough is looking like a potential top-10 QB for the rest of the season. Gibbs is as automatic as any running back in fantasy. Tuten looks to be firmly in control of Jacksonville’s backfield. And Jalen “Larry” Coker might be a legitimate WR2 in Carolina. There are absolutely some holes in this lineup, but we’ll give him his due for now. Future concerns will include the reliability of Bill Merritt, the ineptitude of Michael Wilson, and the generally questionable track record of this team’s coaching ability.

Stock Up: Kevin Concepcion Jr. The stats aren’t there yet, but he’s clearly got some real juice for the Browns, and we fully expect them to continue funneling targets his way.

Stock Down: Justin Herbert. I mean what the fuck was that? He’s 0-2 against the Cardinals and Raiders with two performances that would make Josh Rosen feel shame.

7. Phenom (Justin)

The blockbuster deal between Phenom and Work Ass was the talk of the committee’s office this week with much debate about who won.

TRADE · SEP 17, 2026

THE MCCAFFREY–JEANTY TRADE

Three-for-three between Phenom and Work Ass, valued at each player's 2026 auction price

JUSTIN

Phenom

RECEIVES

RB

Christian McCaffrey

San Francisco

$44

WR

Emeka Egbuka

Tampa Bay

$21

WR

Isaac TeSlaa

Detroit

$1

DRAFT VALUE IN

$66

SWEENEY

Work Ass

RECEIVES

RB

Ashton Jeanty

Las Vegas

$33

WR

Mike Evans

San Francisco

$15

WR

Wan'Dale Robinson

Tennessee

$2

DRAFT VALUE IN $50

Draft value changed hands: $116 — the 4th-most of any trade in league history

Values are what each player cost at the August draft, not current value.

Many were interested by Sweeney abandoning ship on players he valued more highly after two games, but some view it as prescient. One analyst who specializes in perfect Uber Eats orders made the case that McCaffrey's underlying analytical profile has been degrading for two years now, and Sweeney was smart to flip him for the spring-loaded Jeanty. Others question if Kaelon "Sirius" Black will continue to steal touches from McCaffrey. Obviously, Phenom is confident in McCaffrey's ability to continue to produce at the elite level he always has. We like the McCaffrey-Bijan pairing despite Bijan's teammates being mostly illiterate orcs. And if Drew Lock can continue to fill in that admirably for Sam Darnold, Phenom might really have something here.

Stock Up: Tre "Alando" Tucker. Tre had a breakout game against the Chargers as Kirk found him early and often. With Bowers on the cusp of coming back, it's unlikely he can continue this sort of production but if he's the #2 target for the Raiders that might be a solid starter.

Stock Down: Makai Lemon. IDK man. It doesn't seem good when he's clearly behind Dontayvion Wicks in the Eagles pass catching hierarchy.

8. Ger (Ger)

The brief era of Ger competence may already be entering a correction. With Caleb Williams and DJ Moore's immediate future uncertain following injuries, we were left with no choice but to seriously downgrade Ger this week. Even Dobbins is questionable going forward. It's hard for any team to sustain such injuries and keep chugging along. However, if these injuries are short-term, we still believe in this team. James Cook III and Breece Hall are a great RB duo, Travis Kelce looked like he's turning back the clock, and Geno appears to be competent. Assuming good health going forward, Ger might have some difficult lineup decisions on his hands with the way Josh Downs and Stefon Diggs are looking.

Stock Up: Xavier Worthy. To be clear, we think he is horrible at football. But if the Chiefs continue to play him and Mahomes is awesome, he'll almost have no choice but to be productive.

Stock Down: Isaiah Likely. The injury to Jaxson Dart seriously downgrades Likely's outlook in the short term.

9. Pelosis Powder (Mikey)

Oh Poor Pelosi. Right when we were about sing her praises, Jaxson Dart goes down with a knee injury and ruins it. With a healthy Dart, we loved this team. Now Dart and Nabers might both miss time and depth is not this team's strong suit. It's really too bad because Jaxon Smith-Njigba might be reaching Justin Jefferson territory from a couple years ago where he's just fully QB-proof. No Sam Darnold? Doesn't matter because he'll just catch three touchdowns from Drew Lock. Between JSN and Purdy playing like an MVP candidate, the committee was starting to believe that it was Pelosi's year.

However, his 2-0 start gives him a good bit of padding if Dart and/or Nabers miss several weeks. Perhaps he can tread water long enough to remain .500 or so when Dart returns. If that is the case, we still think he can be a playoff contender.

Stock Up: Emmett "Till" Johnson. This guy is one of the elite handcuffs in the league right now. If anything were to happen to Kenneth Walker III, he'd be an immediate top-10 back in the committee's rankings. As it is, he might carve out standalone value.

Stock Down: Travis "Torii" Hunter. We were ripping MHJ's bust potential before but good god. Travis barely plays offense. He barely plays defense. What was the Jaguars' plan? It's like they drafted an all-purpose retard just to be a backup at two positions.

10. Free Paid (Gallo)

Free Paid rebounded nicely after an ugly opening week. Kirk Cousins looks dialed, Bo Nix bounced back and the DeVonta Smith true believers were screaming various dialects of "and one" across the northeast as they watched him absorb targets in clutch time on Sunday. All of these things plus the emergence of TreVeyon "Rickey" Henderson are good news for Free Paid. The committee thinks it's important to highlight scholars where possible, so please take a minute to watch this video of Henderson.

<https://x.com/Theodiesenhaus/status/2101858489165291537>

That's the type of world-class education that you get at Ohio State.

Elsewhere for Free Paid, Deshaun Watson played better than we've seen in years. This was his 4th highest point total since joining the Browns and the highest since 2023. He might even keep his job.

Stock Up: Sam LaPorta. If Detroit is going to be in shootouts every week, LaPorta is bound to see an uptick in targets. Him and Goff's chemistry appears to be at an all-time high.

Stock Down: This bench. We did a quick survey to get an idea of the value of everyone's bench. This is proprietary stuff of course but one tidbit we were given permission to share: 9 out of 16 owners said they would rather $5 of FAAB than a single person on the Free Paid bench.

11. Charles Dickens (Mitch)

Dickens is down, but not out. His big bets are not panning out as hoped so far. Lamar Jackson is 10th in QB points. Drake Maye is outside the top-25. AJ Brown is scrambled. And he's 0-2. This is not how Dickens drew it up a month ago. The haters who sniggered at him stacking Patriots at the draft are loving every second of this. But there is hope. Dalton Kincaid looks like the best tight end this side of Trey McBride. Chase Brown has been dominating the Cincinnati backfield. And Rashod Bateman looks like a WR1 for as long as Zay Flowers is sidelined. Will this be enough to turn around what is clearly a sinking ship? Probably not. The committee is pretty pessimistic about where things are headed.

Stock Up: Matthew Golden. Golden no longer looks like the ineffective rookie he was for much of last season. Jordan Love clearly trusts him and will continue to get him the ball.

Stock Down: Drake Maye. Were the schedule chirpers right? Of course not. But $55 for him is potentially looking like the most expensive pick of the draft.

12. Art of the Deal (Matt)

Art needed a win after a rough week one and he got it against Tua, waxing him by 30 on the backs of Bryce "Harper" Young and Garrett Wilson. The competence Bryce has shown the first couple of weeks is making us slightly more confident in him as a season long starter, but we need to see a little bit more before fully pushing our chips in. There's still a lot of questions on this roster that prevent us from going higher. Obviously, QB play is a disaster for the Falcons but the complete no show by Kyle Pitts these first two weeks is so on-brand for him after balling out during his contract year. Some are questioning if he spent all offseason inhaling Chick-Fil-A. He was seen breathing heavily after running a simple curl route in the 1st quarter on Sunday. That type of conditioning is usually reserved for people like Onion back in 2020. We fear this may be the season Art misses the playoffs for the first time.

Stock Up: Darren "Sharper" Waller. Waller rolled in off the street and caught two touchdowns in week two for the Panthers. Remarkable for a player who has barely seen the field since 2023.

Stock Down: Quentin Johnston. This Chargers stuff looks really bad. After a solid year in 2025, Johnston appears to have reverted to his natural state of stone hands.

13. Ginny Sack (Chris)

Ginny had a brutal week. Heading into Monday night, nobody in his lineup had scored more than 12.5 points. Javonte Williams was bottled up as Dak threw for a million. Luther Burden's breakout has not materialized yet. Courtland "Eddie" Sutton is on washed watch. And injuries to Nico "Phil" Collins and Jadarian Price are not helping his cause. After a strong week one, we can't right him off, but he needs a healthy Nico and Price ASAP. Watson's surprising resurgence will likely keep Shedeur sidelined for a little bit longer.

Stock Up: Data Dog. Up nearly 7% on Monday, the Dog is humming. As it was put by the scholars over at TradingKey, Institutional buying and cloud platform adoption drove Datadog's strong upward momentum.

Stock Down: The Roster. Slapping up sub-80 points with two healthy quarterbacks is the type of performance usually reserved for cellar dwellers.

14. Work Ass (Sweeney)

Work Ass escapes the basement this week after his stars (Dak and Ja'Marr) played like stars this week. Both had multi-TD games in Texas to power Work Ass to 113 points. Did he still lose? Yeah of course. But when expectations were as low as they were for Work Ass, this is improvement. If Carson "Palmer" Wentz remains in the lineup, we might even begin to like this team. Ashton Jeanty is cooking. Devaughn Vele "Chop" has built a nice rapport with Tyler Shough. And Adonai "Malcolm" Mitchell has developed into a real receiver for the Jets. Credit Work Ass for identifying those undervalued players.

Stock Up: A potential repeat bid. Bookmakers have moved the odds from 100-1 to 85-1 after seeing this performance.

Stock Down: Mike Evans. He's a bit of a geezer now so perhaps it's to be expected, but he left the game with an aggravated hip and will have to be "monitored" this week.

15. Stewed C (Joey)

Stewart might be fully cooked. With Jayden's injury, he put up the fewest points in the league this week. Jeremiyah Love is struggling to generate big plays, his RB2 position is an absolute mess. Puka is missing games, Goedert is doubtful. There's not a lot to cling to here in terms of making a turnaround. Still, there are some bright spots on this otherwise woeful roster.

Marcus Mariota will take over and his rumored connection with Antonio "Banderas" Williams might prove to be just the thing Stewed C needs. Whispers out of Commanders practices have painted a picture of Mariota and Williams lighting up the defenses while Dan Quinn and his crew looked on in awe. If these two can carry over that performance into the games, Stewed C stands a chance of salvaging this season.

Stock Up: Dontayvion Wicks. An afterthought in Green Bay, Wicks has emerged as a key piece of the Eagles passing attack. Credit to him for building a fast relationship with Jalen Hurts.

Stock Down: Jayden Daniels. Dislocating the same elbow twice in two years in the type of thing that could only happen to a 6'2" 120 lb quarterback.

16. Tuanigamanuolepola Donny (Kevin)

We were looking at this one for a while. Really tried to find a way to spin this positively for Tua. Maybe with the Dart injury Jameis Winston could emerge and become a reliable QB2 for Tua? Maybe with his wealth of receiver options, he could put together a solid lineup with two middling QBs at least? Then we took a deeper look. It wasn't pretty. Drake London is praying on his hands and knees for the return of Michael Penix Jr. He's been ruined with Cooper Rush in the lineup. Colston Loveland, a committee favorite, has seemed to have forgotten the season started. He has one catch through two games. Quinshon Judkins appears to be running into a wall on every carry.

Any hope of a turnaround likely rests on the shoulders of Chris Olave. Through two weeks, Olave is the WR4 behind only JSN, Amon-Ra and CeeDee.

Stock Up: Bucky Irving "Fryar". Irving looks to have reverted to his rookie year form. He is showing the explosiveness that made him such a coveted player last offseason.

Stock Down: Cooper Rush. I think we've seen the last of him for the Falcons.